potty training

So! Your toddler is all _____^{Past tense verb} up and still _____^{Verb ending in ing} itself. That's ok, we have a _____^{Adjective} solution. Go to _____^{Location} and get your _____^{Adjective} self a training _____^{Noun}.

Your _____^{Noun} may be a bit _____^{Adjective} at first, but they'll warm up to it. They might still _____^{Verb} themselves for a while. Just keep _____^{Verb ending in ing} them on the potty. Try explaining what the _____^{Noun} is for. Tell them that it is for _____^{Verb ending in ing} and _____^{Verb ending in ing} in, and that even though they have a _____^{Noun} it is not for _____^{Verb ending in ing} and _____^{Verb ending in ing} in anymore. They are now a _____^{Adjective} kid. If that doesn't work, have them _____^{Verb} on the potty every hour on the _____^{Noun} to see if they'll _____^{Verb} in it. If your toddler still _____^{Present tense verb} then you can just go ahead and keep them in a _____^{Noun} with some _____^{Plural noun}. Just _____^{Verb ending in ing}.
That's child abandonment. Just _____^{Verb} the best you can and hope your _____^{Noun} stops peeing on itself.
