The Three Little Pigs

Once upon a Noun , three little pigs decided to leave home and venture out into the world. They traveled Adverb for a few days until they came upon a charming village nestled within a large forest.

Immediately taken with the beauty of the village, the pigs decided to settle there.

Each pig found an open plot of land and began setting up his new home. The first order of Noun was to build a house. The pigs, knowledgeable in both architecture and object Adjective programming, each created houses based on the common House class. The House class specified the basic Noun - Plural , such as NumberOfWindows, and functionality, such as HeatHouse, that people had come to expect in a house.

However, each pig chose a unique subclass to suit his own needs.
