Marie Thibodeaux

She was also a Voodoo High Priestess.

She lived her entire life in New Location, establishing a reputation from an early age as a Adjective Job and Job. People travelled for miles simply to visit her Location, although many more sampled her legendary Noun. By the Year, she had simultaneously become one of the most Adjective and revered figures in Location.

In 1881, a landowner named First Name of a Person Last Name of a Person travelled to New Location from Baton Location. Parrish was vastly wealthy and devoutly religious, but possessed a Adjective fascination for the Noun. He had hired a platoon of Job from the recently concluded Civil Event, and with them he marched down Bourbon Location and into Marie's Location.

Despite the protests of her assistants, Marie granted Parrish an audience. He had heard rumours that the great Voodoo Title had discovered the secret to eternal Noun, and demanded that she yield it to him.

Never Adjective, Marie corrected him: she had indeed discovered a ritual that would grant Adjective, but only for a set period of time - Year years, to be exact. Once performed, the subject would rise again after his natural death, having no need for food, Noun, or Noun, immune to disease, and utterly impervious to Part of Body harm. After fifty years had elapsed, however, the subject would die once more, never to rise again.

Frustrated by this revelation, Parrish nevertheless knew her by reputation to be an Adjective - Ends in EST woman, and would not pass up the opportunity to live beyond his natural lifespan. Marie agreed to conduct the Event for him, as long as he vowed to leave New Location permanently once it had been concluded. Parrish agreed, and the Event was performed. True to his word, Parrish returned to Baton Rouge later that day - but not before ordering his mercenaries to murder Marie and her assistants and to burn her Location to the ground.

Location folk are renowned for their superstitions, which are many and varied. It was unusual, however, that dozens would later swear that they had seen Adjective Noun - Plural making their way en masse up to the Parrish Manse that night. The following morning, the Number mercenaries were found with their Part of Body snapped as though they had been Noun. Parrish himself was discovered in his bed, wide-eyed and apparently terror-stricken, his throat torn out with such Adjective that the State Coroner was forced to conclude that a bear had somehow made its way into his locked, second-floor bedroom. The hints of Adjective magic were not lost on locals, however, who promptly buried all
