Meet the Boxcar Children

One Adjective night four children stood in front of a Place. No one knew them. No one knew where they had come from. The baker's wife saw them first, as they stood Verb - Present ends in ING at the window of her store. The little boy was looking at the Noun - Plural, the big boy was looking at the loaves of Noun, and the two girls were looking at the Noun - Plural.

Now the baker's wife did not like children. She did not like boys at all. So she came to the front of the bakery and ______, looking very cross.

"The cake is ______, Jessie," the little boy said. He was about five years old.

"Yes, Benny," said the big girl. "But bread is better for you. Isn't it, Henry?"

"Oh, yes," said Henry. "We must have some _____, and cake is not good for Benny and Violet."

"I like bread best, anyway," said Violet. She was about ten years old, and she had pretty Color hair and Color eyes.

"That is just like you, Violet," said Henry, smiling at her. "Let's Verb - Base Form into the bakery. Maybe will let us stay here for the night."
