The Very Curious Rabbit

Once there was a Adjective rabbit with very Adjective ears. He was very good at hearing all sorts of things, like the monkeys chattering about Fruit Plural, or the cat's Animal Sound at night.

One day he heard a very strange sound. Outside his home he heard a whap-whap-whap he'd never heard before.

"What is that?" the Adjective Rabbit asked. He stepped outside and Verb - Past Tense down the road. He came across a hole in the ground and stuck his head in. Inside he saw Mrs. Animal. She was Verb - Present ends in ING.

"Hello," she said, and twirled. "Would you like to dance?"

"No," said Rabbit. This is not where the sound was coming from. He pulled his head out and went Verb - Present ends in ING down the road.

Next he came across an big Color elephant jumping rope. Thu-UMP th-UMP th-UMP went the elephant.

"Do you want to play?" He asked the rabbit.

"No," said the Rabbit. This was not the sound he heard. He kept Verb - Present ends in ING.

Soon he couldn't hear the sound at all. He was very far from home and very sleepy. So he turned back around and walked all the way back. Then, he heard it again. He looked up and down and left and right. Then he saw it.

A big Color dog sitting by his home wagging his tail. Whap-whap-whap, went the dog's tail.

"Hi" said the dog, "I'm your new neighbor." And he licked the rabbit from the tip of his Part of Body to the top of his Part of Body.
