

,dfjs

1. Noun

,dfjs

Fiction written in first person perspective is identifiable by the use of the pronoun "I". For example, the fiction writing might read "I stepped out of the house and walked down the road."

The story is told from the point of view from one of the characters, usually a major Noun who is often the protagonist. The downside to first person perspective is that the reader can only see, hear and learn what that character does. The reader will only have the same experience that the character does.