Devin Gets a Job (Fck Yeah!)

November 4th, 2015. Devin Boudreau is prepared to go to his Noun. It's at 9am and he is tired, but he is Verb - Past Participle to get a job. This is the second Noun for the same place so he's feeling pretty Adverb good about it. Making sure he has his Noun and his confidence, he gets ready to venture out into the Adjective, Adjective, Adjective world. He is Verb - Past Participle. Today is going to be a good day. About 15 minutes later, he is waiting nervously to meet the person meant to interview him. As he waits, he can't help Verb - Present Tense. Pulling out his phone, pretending to be very interested in the poster advertising their newest burger, The Proper Noun Baconator. After only 5 minutes, but what felt like an hour of waiting, someone approached him. It was a guy, probably in his mid 40's. He had a Verb - Past Participle head, making him bald except for the creepy mustache curling upwards like the smile of the grinch. Devin felt himself wanting to laugh, but held back. He got up and shook his Adjective hand. The man stood there for a long moment, staring at Devin, eyes narrowed before nodding Adverb and simply telling him he had the job. Astounded, Devin thanked him and turned to leave. So distracted by his Noun, he walked right into the Adjective Noun doors. Red from embarrassment, he ran the rest of the way home. But thinking about it, who cares if he managed to walk into the one transparent thing in the entire restaurant? He got the damn job.
