Mao and the fiends

- 1. Adjective
- 2. Determiner
- 3. Determiner
- 4. Noun Plural
- 5. Verb Past Tense

Mao and the fiends

Once apon a time, Mao was playing in the sand patch when he saw Basil come out the back door. He growled and went behind the shed to sleep. He found the perfect spot, a good balance of dirt, dead grass and rocks. Ooo Adjective thought Mao the Determiner. He curled up and went to sleep. In his dream Basil was Determiner evil cat that could summon dead Noun-Plural called fiends. He was creeping up on him every second. Then BOOM! He springs Mao! He gets up and sprints. Then he relized it wasn't a dream. He was running as fast as he could. The fiends were catching up on him! Then he thought of Jackie Chan and did a triple backflip, summersault, dive, roll and Verb-Past Tense them in the face. Maoso wins! +100 points.
Game Over

©2025 WordBlanks.com · All Rights Reserved.