Petrarch, Wyatt, and Howard, Oh My!

The living that o'er my thought doth reign,
And in mine heart established his throne,
Oft approaches me clad in alone
To and spread his banner 'cross my brain.
Yet she that me love and lover's pain,
Will that my desire stay unknown,
And reverence and reason postpone,
For my burning giveth her disdain.
Thereby, love fleeth to my heart,
Abandoning his travail with and cries,
And hideth his face from the world apart.
To serve my master, I endure love's smart,
For love he, and now from loving dies.
Yet, sweet is the end love slays the hart.
