How to Ace an Interview

1. I was interviewing for my _____ Adjective job after college, and said I planned to stop _____ Verb - Present _____ ends in ING after I had kids to be a stay-at-home mom. Yeah, I didn't get that job. I did, in fact, become a stay-at-home _____ Proper Noun, after _____ Number years with three _____ Adjective _____ Noun - Plural, but I never mentioned _____ Verb - Present ends in ING to in an interview again.

2. Someone interviewed with us for a receptionist position in a _____ Location clinic. She had recently been a _____ Verb - Present ends in ING student, and said she had _____ Verb - Past Tense out, because she wasn't _____ Adjective of the _____ Proper Noun aspect and had a _____ Adjective time working with _____ Noun - Plural.

3. My husband went on a job interview at a _____ Noun store. The interviewer asked if he was _____ Adjective about his _____ Noun. He _____ Verb - Past Tense and was thinking the question meant the opposite and said no!

4. The candidate had applied for _____ Number positions, a _____ Noun one as well as two as a case manager. Part way through the interview, after asking us several _____ Noun questions, the candidate says, " _____ exclamation, is this not for the _____ Noun manager role?" He then went on to say that his career goal was not to _____ Verb - Base Form. Needless to say, we didn't take his application any further.

5. I was interviewing for a senior account manager position in the consumer _____ industry (the industry I've _____ in for about _____ years). The interviewer asked a lot of clich(c)d questions that might have been appropriate for someone fresh out of _____. I had already decided that I wasn't interested in _____ for this person. So when I was asked, "What is your _____?" I decided to answer _____ cookies. We both got a good _____ out of that, but I think because it wasn't one of the _____ expected responses, I was _____. Just as well!
