The Walk Home

Hildegard von Nightshade was walking home from _____ goth school subject school one day. She walked through campus with its _____ dismal adjective sidewalks and police call boxes. Hildegard hated school. She put _____ classic goth album on to listen to on her headphones, and the music helped carry her away. She felt so peaceful. Her _____ color that is black dress was soft and warm against her skin, and loved the way her _____ color that is also black tights made her legs look.

Hildegard was feeling good as she approached the parking lot, where a crowd of _____ Adjective middle-aged ladies and lanky boys stood. "Hey! Don't you know it's not Halloween yet?!" One boy _____ painfully normal, _____ conformist, derivative, un-Goth verb ending in ed.

Hildegard wanted to cry for a _____ amount of time. But instead she remembered the dismemberment spell her _____ relative had taught her. _____ Interjection, she said, feeling herself grow strong.

And all her enemies were torn from limb to _____ body part.

Hildegard put her headphones on again and smiled. She felt so peaceful.
