The Walk Home

Hildegaard was feeling good as she approached the parking lot, where a crowd of Adjective middle-aged ladies and lanky boys stood. "Hey! Don't you know it's not Halloween yet?!" One boy painfully normal.

Hildegaard wanted to cry for a ______. But instead she remembered the dismemberment spell her relative had taught her. Interjection, she said, feeling herself grow strong.

And all her enemies were torn from limb to body part.

Hildegaard put her headphones on again and smiled. She felt so peaceful.
