Jazz: The Recipe
Jazz began with a "" that had many different ingredients. Different groups of people, including Africans and Europeans, were part of the recipe. Different kinds of music, including the blues and ragtime, were also a part of the All of these ingredients to make America's own music, jazz. Workers sang songs during the long workday. They sang in the and on ships. They sang while working on the railroads. The work song was an important part of their day. With tools in their hands, they worked to a beat. The songs made life a little easier. There were many kinds of work songs, and these songs played a part in jazz. Music of immigrant Americans added to jazz. The Scotch-Irish had ballads. Ballads tell stories of heroes and their bravery, and these stories are often sad. The song is usually In a ballad, the story is often more important than the music. Ballads became another ingredient in the jazz recipe.
