The Fireplace

When the boys were born, we were living in an Adjective, Adjective Building in City, Ontario. Jeremy and Ben were about Number Unit of time old and were at the stage where they would pull themselves up and hold onto Noun. For Adjective reasons I had child-proofed the house so I could leave them alone for periods of time while I attended to Noun - Plural in other parts of the house. To keep them out of the Noun, I had created a barricade of Noun items, one of which was a very Adjective Adjective Noun. One morning, I was busy Verb - Present ends in ING the breakfast dishes while they Verb - Past Tense in the living room when I became aware that things had become very Adjective in the other room. When I Verb - Past Tense into the living room to see what they were up to, there was Ben sitting in the Adjective Noun completely covered head to toe in Noun - Plural while Jeremy watched Adverb waiting for his turn. Apparently, they had managed to Verb the Noun away just enough to squeeze past and into the fireplace. Needless to say, I had to place something much Adverb - Comparative in front of the fireplace after that!
