Spaghetti

Alright, I'm gonna write about one of my many beatings as a child. One time, my mom was making spaghetti for dinner. I didn't want to eat spaghetti and I told my mom that. She said, "I don't care what you want, you're gonna eat this spaghetti." I was feeling bold that day so I said, "um actually I'm not gonna eat that spaghetti." My mom got Adjective because I kept going back and forth with her and getting smart, so she was like "now I'm bout to beat your Noun." She starts taking off her Noun so I start Verb - Past Tense. I'm Verb - Present ends in ING around the couch and she's chasing me. Here's where it starts getting Adjective. I charge up the Noun and my mom is close on my Noun. I just barely make it to my room and lock the door. My mom turns the knob, and starts pulling on it harder when she realizes that I locked it. She was like "Proper Noun Proper Noun. Verb - Base Form this damn door." Three minutes later I still didn't unlock the door so my mom says "alright" and walks away. I'm Verb - Base Form on my bed all smug and smiling, thinking to myself how I just escaped a beating, when I start hearing the sound of an Noun Noun thing. Within a few minutes, my mom is in my room. She took my door off the hinges! Then she proceeded to give me an extraordinary beating, one for the books. I was Verb - Base Form on my bed crying for like twenty minutes. I still ended up eating that Noun too. And I didn't have a door for like three months. Moral of the story is, if your mom makes spaghetti, eat the spaghetti.
