Little Red Riding Hood

Once upon a time, in the year 1850, there lived a young, Adjective little girl called Red. She lived alone with her Noun and was very close with her grandmother. She often went to visit her grandmother to bring her home baked goods, and her grandmother's favourite Noun - Plural. There was only one problem. Red's grandmother lived all the way over on the other side of the Noun. Red and her mother knew that the forest was full of strange Noun - Plural and Adjective pathways that someone could very easily get lost on. Red's mother only let Red travel to her grandmother's early in the Noun when the sun was Adjective and the path way clear.

One day, Red was very eager to go visit her Pronoun because she had just baked a fresh batch of chocolate chip muffins earlier in the morning. She begged her mother to let her go, even though she knew that it would start to get dark by the time she got home.
