Extreme Training

Talk about being ahead of its time. The AuSable River Canoe Marathon was an extreme sport years before the term, "_____Term or Phrase_____," was coined. When the race was conceived in _____Year_____, no one even knew if paddlers could make it from _____Town In MI_____ to _____Town In MI_____ non-stop. In fact, to completely check out the race course, Marathon organizers required _____Number_____ days _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ during the daylight. In addition, no one had yet run a _____Noun_____ race throughout the night.

Another indication of its _____Adjective_____ nature is that the Marathon has never been cancelled due to _____Adjective_____ weather; including _____Adjective_____ winds, heavy _____Noun Plural_____, light _____Noun Plural_____, thunder and lightning, fog, low water levels, flooding, _____Adjective_____ heat or cold. The Marathon has gone on, whether there was snow in the air during a _____Month_____ race, or wind gusts churning _____Number_____ foot waves on Foote Pond in July. It's no wonder, then, that the AuSable Marathon has attracted a group of _____Adjective_____ persons who have kayaked, _____Verb Past Tense_____, _____Verb Past Tense_____, _____Verb Past Tense_____ and competed in other sports at local, regional, national and international levels. They are competitors who train _____Adverb_____ and _____Verb Base Form_____ hard.

If approximately _____Number_____ people have paddled in the Marathon over its 70-year history, you can bet that there are _____Number_____ different training tales out there -- some unusual, some dangerous and some flat-out _____Adjective_____. Try talking to some of these paddlers, and you will, without a doubt, hear more _____Adjective_____ stories from some of the _____ Adjective Ends in EST _____ people that you'll ever meet.
