Stuck between a rock & a hard place (An Irrelevant Story Part 1)

_____Onomatopoeia_____! The double doors _____Onomatopoeia - Past tense_____ open followed by _____Person A_____ and _____Person B_____ the _____Unit of time_____ the door handles _____Verb Past Tense_____ themselves in the _____Adjective_____ plaster on the walls. They ran along the _____Adjective_____ corridor for _____Number_____ _____Unit of measurement_____ _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ _____Noun Plural_____ and _____Adjective_____ _____Noun Plural_____ on their way. The corridor opened out onto a large balcony overseeing a _____Adjective_____ waterfall. _____Person A_____ searched _____Direction_____, while _____Person B_____ searched _____Another direction_____. _____Curse_____, there were no ways to escape other than that _____Adjective_____ corridor, but they'd just _____Verb Past Tense_____ along it hoping the balcony would be an escape from the _____Beast such as an ogre_____. Alas, the balcony had been a dead end, and now they were trapped between a _____Adjective_____ thing and a _____Number_____ _____Unit of measurement_____ drop to certain death (well that's an interesting take on the "rock and a hard place" metaphor).

Suddenly _____Person A_____ exclaimed "_____Exclamation_____!", he'd found the solution "why don't we climb over the balcony railing but hide underneath? Then if the _____Same beast_____ tries to follow us he's sure to fall into the abyss"

"_____Adjective_____ idea _____Person A_____," replied _____Person B_____, "but it will require _____Adjective_____ planning and the slightest miscalculation could mean disaster."

"Oh nonsense! Don't be such a _____Noun_____, this is fun! And if it doesn't work, what a _____Adjective_____ way to go!" And with that, _____Person A_____ _____Verb Past Tense_____ up onto the railing, inches from death "that _____Adjective_____ _____Same beast_____ has _____Noun Plural_____ for _____Body part - Plural_____ and his _____Body part - Plural_____ couldn't _____Verb Base Form_____ worse if he _____Verb Past Tense_____ his _____Part of Body_____ all over them, I bet we've got at least _____Number_____ _____Unit of time - Plural_____ before he reaches us!" As the _____Same beast_____ approached the _____Adjective_____ _____Noun Plural_____ on the wall began to _____Verb Base Form_____, then _____Verb Past Tense_____ down onto the balcony. One bounced and hit _____Person B_____ over the head. Blinded, he _____Verb Past Tense_____ around until he contacted _____Person A_____, who _____Verb Past Tense_____ backwards into the void _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ in _____Emotion_____. After leaning on _____Person A_____, (who was now _____Number_____ _____Unit of measurement_____ below and getting further every _____Unit of time_____) _____Person B_____ realised that he was now _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ on thin air so he too followed _____Person A_____.

"Is this it?" _____Verb Past Tense_____ _____Person A_____ as the balcony became smaller and smaller and the _____Adjective_____ water came rushing up to meet him, which he could now see also contained _____Adjective_____ alligators, "what luck" his internal monologue continued, "even if I survive the fall the alligators will be _____Emotion_____ to _____Verb Base Form_____ on my _____Adjective_____ flesh". He tried not to imagine his _____Part of Body_____ being _____Verb Past Tense_____ between the _____Adjective_____ creatures, and his _____Part of Body_____ serving as a toothpick. Blackness, just the sound of water flooding his _____Part of Body_____ , shortly followed by a muffled splash as _____Person B_____ followed him.
