Full Moon Folly

Once upon a time there was a single, young woman named Kimberly* who'd just moved to a small town in the wilds of Appalachia. After a short while of adjusting to living in Coal Country and thinking she might like to finally put some roots down, she decided it was time to take a dip in the dating pool. Work kept her extremely busy and the _____ Adjective _____ Noun _____ wasn't her thing, so meeting _____ Noun Plural _____ was hard. Seeing Kimberly's frustration, an office buddy suggested trying an on-line dating site. Even though she'd not had any luck with those sites in the past, she shrugged and said, "Sure. Why not?"

A selfie photo shoot was soon completed and a profile was set up. In it she displayed her varied interests including her love of _____ Noun _____, _____ Noun _____, fast _____ Noun Plural _____, and martinis using her signature snark. "If a man can't speak sarcasm, he just isn't worth my time," she snickered as she composed her responses to the site's prompts. With the profile submitted, she sat back and waited for the matches to come in.

The next day, she received the e-mail notifying her of her profile approval and first round of matches. Kimberly knew all about the penchant of on-line daters to _____ Verb Base Form _____ Noun Plural _____ about themselves, so she opened the missive with a bit of _____ Adjective _____ and a healthy dose of _____ Adjective _____.

Kimberly was a modern girl, so making the first move to initiate a conversation didn't intimidate her. Though to aid in her decision of whom to message, she decided to sort the matches based on a few simple criteria: (1) Are there common _____ Noun Plural _____? She didn't buy the whole opposites attract idea, so she hoped she would have a few _____ Noun Plural _____ in common with a man. It would definitely make initial contact and subsequent conversations easier to navigate. (2) Does he mention a love of _____ Noun _____ and/or _____ Noun Plural _____? She believed this might indicate how open a man is about _____ Noun _____. As she scanned the men's profiles she mused, "A man who loves his _____ Noun _____ usually knows how to treat a woman, right?" (3) Is there a _____ Adjective _____ _____ Noun _____? She wasn't all that picky about _____ Noun _____, and she was far from shallow; but she wanted to see right off the bat if any of these men looked like a potential _____ Adjective _____ _____ Noun _____ or were sporting a _____ Adjective _____ _____ Noun _____.

While Kimberly was perusing the more promising matches' profiles, an instant message from a man named Chris * popped up. He wasn't on her list of matches, so she checked out his profile real quick. "29, single, _____ Noun _____, _____ Adjective _____ enthusiast, _____ Adjective _____ _____ Noun _____, kinda cute in a geeky way, no red flags in his profile like he might be a _____ Noun _____. We seem to only have _____ Verb Present ends in ING _____ in common, but what do I have to lose by talking to him?" she reckoned and accepted his chat request.

Kimberly IM'd and e-mailed with Chris for a few days; and they seemed to hit it off, discovering they had more in common than just a love of _____ Noun Plural _____. He seemed like a normal guy, if a little _____ Adjective _____; but she could work with _____ Adjective _____. She was proud of her own _____ Adjective _____.

The Full Moon Festival was happening that weekend at Riverfront Park, so they decided to meet at a local bookstore's bar on Saturday then head over to the festival after. During their date planning, Chris asked what she'd like to drink and offered to stop at the bar as soon as he arrived if she'd get a _____ Noun _____ for them when she got there. Knowing the bar was usually busy on the weekend, Kimberly arrived a few minutes early to claim their _____ Noun _____.

She spotted Chris immediately when he entered, not only because she recognized him from his photos but also because he. was. Verb Present ends in ING. a. Noun. And not just any Noun, but a Noun that was about three sizes too big and looked suspiciously similar to a 70's era Adjective Noun.

She thought to herself, "Okay, maybe he just has an eclectic sense of style. But a Adjective Noun ?? Still, I can't ding him for it without at least giving a Noun a chance."

After Chris grabbed their drinks-a Full Moon Martini for Kimberly, a Bud Light for him-and some Noun and Noun, he came to the table and Verb Past Tense a Noun in her hand. "

For you, milady," he gallantly stated with a little bow. "I brought you a copy of my Noun about the Adjective Noun in Weston. I Verb Past Tense it for you, too." She couldn't help but giggle at his flourish, but she thought it odd that he'd never mentioned being an Noun in all of their conversations, especially since he seemed so proud of his achievement. Kimberly internally shrugged. It was a minor thing, and she shouldn't look for things to nitpick. At least not yet.

As they Verb Past Tense their Noun and chatted, Kimberly noticed Chris shoveling handfuls of Noun into his mouth and Verb Present ends in ING with his mouth full. It was totally grossing her out

, but she tried to ignore it by looking down at the Noun or around the room instead of making eye contact. She ended up locking eyes with a Noun at the table behind Chris and watched him most of the time.

Their conversation also ventured into the bizarre. It turned out that Chris's single status wasn't as cut and dried as he'd led her to believe. Although he was Verb Past Tense, neither he nor his estranged Noun were financially stable enough to live on their own; so they were still living together. In. a. studio. apartment. She barely resisted rolling her eyes and saying, "Sure. That's not suspicious or anything." He then proceeded to describe a _____ Noun _____ he'd had with his _____ Noun _____ and his _____ Adjective _____ Noun _____ and a whole lot of other _____ Adjective _____ Noun _____ he'd like to try next.

Kimberly was _____ Verb Past Tense _____ at the turn in their exchange. She was not a _____ Noun _____ by any stretch, but the topic of _____ Noun _____ and _____ Noun _____ seemed more like a third or fourth date discussion not a first date one. She was kind of offended since he just jumped right into it with absolutely no segue. To keep from throwing her drink in Chris's face, she guzzled that shit fast. She was not about to waste precious vodka on this _____ Noun _____.

She somehow managed to steer the conversation to their _____ Noun _____, but the red flag was waving furiously.

The _____ Noun _____ at the next table heard what Chris said and gave some major _____ Noun _____, too. She needed to escape this debacle of a date fast, so she excused herself to the _____ Noun _____ to figure out what to do.

When she emerged from the _____ Adjective _____ Noun _____ having decided to attempt a covert escape without passing Chris on the way, the _____ Adjective _____ Noun _____ from the next table was waiting on her. He introduced himself, "Hi, I'm Matt*. That dude you're with is a Class A _____ Noun _____. I know a back way out.

Wanna go to the festival with me?"

She _____ Verb Past Tense _____ herself at Matt in _____ Adjective _____ Noun _____. "Bless you! It's nice to meet you, Matt. I'm Kimberly, and I'd love to," she responded. So began a wild and raucous _____ Adjective _____ Noun _____ the likes of which neither had ever experienced. And they lived happily ever after.

*names have been changed to _____ Verb Base Form _____ the _____ Noun _____. Oh, who am I kidding, ain't nobody _____ Verb Present ends in ING _____ these _____ Noun _____. Ha!
