When the power goes out...

So, um, I was _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ in Math class. Mrs. Grundy was lecturing about some inane topic in _____Noun_____, when suddenly, all the _____Noun Plural_____ go off. I look over across the room at my crush, _____Name_____, to make sure he is _____Adjective_____. I realize I cannot _____Verb Base Form_____ him. I drop to my _____body part plural_____ and crawl around until I finally reach the _____Noun_____punctuation_____ I open the door and escape to the _____location_____, where I hope to _____Verb Base Form_____ some food. It turns out, everybody had the same idea. The entire _____same location_____ is crowded, but I notice that all the _____Noun Plural_____ are still separated by table. Since it is dark, I trip over _____Noun_____ and I feel a pair of _____Adjective_____ arms catch me . I look up, and say, "_____Same name_____! Is that you?" The voice of the _____Subject in school_____ nerd, _____Second name_____, answers, "Are you _____Adjective_____?" I feel heavy _____emotion_____ in my heart. _____Second name_____ continues, "I picked the lock to the kitchen and found the _____Adjective_____ stockpile of food . Let's go." He grabs my hand and we _____Verb Base Form_____ to the kitchen and find a huge pile of _____food_____. But there are only wrappers left! _____first name_____ screams, "What happened to the _____food_____?" We follow the trail of wrappers and find _____first name_____ huddled in the corner, wiping his mouth with the last candy wrapper. My heart _____Verb Present ends in S_____ even more, and I say, "_____first name_____! I thought you were better than that! You were my _____Noun_____!" _____first name_____ flips me the finger and _____Verb Present ends in S_____ away. _____first name_____ puts his _____Adjective_____ arms around me and pulls me in. "You know, I've liked you since _____Number_____ grade," he says. Sometimes, it's possible to find love in a power-less place.
