Date With a Zombie?

I	_ in a deep	Noun	and hesitantl	y walk into th	ne bar.
This probably isn't a good	Noun, but it	t's been mo	nths since I've	been on a pro	oper date, and	d when Cora
my over-involved, happily mar	ried younger sist	terinsisted	I join this nev	w dating app	called People	With Noun Plural, I gave in. I	can be a bit of a	dork, so it	seemed more	up my alley t	han the Tinde	ers of the world, and I'd hoped signing up	would get her o	off my back	about my	Adjective	_, desert-dry	love life.
I wasn't expecting a guy to	Verb Base Form	_ me so qu	ickly. Or sugg	est a date bef	Fore we even	had much of a chance to chat on the app. Or fo	or that date to be	onof all	laysHallowe	en. But like I	said, it's bee	n a while, and Kyle seemed asAdjective	a guy as any.
Of course, a Halloween date at	a semi-crowded	bar creates	an entirely	Adjective	issue of w	hat to wear.
Costume or no costume? In the	end, I went with	n my usual-	-all black. And	d at the very l	ast second, I	added a cat-
ears headband, a reasonable con	mpromise, I hop	e.
The bar itself is far more dresse	ed up for the occ	asion, deck	ed out in fake	Noun Plura	, jack-o	o-lanterns, stuffed bats, and comically	Adjective W	itches. It's a	hodgepodge	mix of creepy	and cartoon	ish, not unlike the current clientele. It's more _	Adjective	than usual	, , and though	I've been her	e several time	es before, it's impossible to tell whether I	Verb Base Form	anyone	with their face	s covered by	Noun	_ and costume makeup.
I take a seat at the only available	e bistro table, w	hich is con	veniently posi	tioned in the	Adjective	corner of the venue opposite the hall lead	ling to the restro	oms.

nerves flutter beneath my really been that longas a waiter dressed as a asks for my order. I glance at the small laminated menu of the day's drink specials.
"A zombietini," I order, figuring I might as well get into the spirit of the holiday, and a bright green, Martini is delivered.
I peek at my watch, noting my date is already several late. Fantastic.
I down the zombietini faster than I normally would, willing it to calm my jitters. I don't even Form this guy, let alone like him, and I have no rational reason to be this Except I'm at dating, and I'm starting to wonder if I even remember how.
But as the minutes tick by, and I order and not-so-slowly yet another zombietini, I wonder if my "date" will show at all.
The costumes in the bar are borderline The women are dressed as the usual witches and such. The men's costumes have more variety. There's a guy dressed as Big, and another wearing and covered in glitter, and I smirk as I get the satire.
I let out another as I raise my hand to order my third drinkthe last I'll have before I give up on Kyle and leavewhen my eyes catch on an convincing zombie at the far end of the bar. He stands there alone, staring straight ahead, and I, wondering if the features beneath the layers of zombie makeup resemble those of Kyle's profile picture. I wave in his direction, unsure if it's even him, but even more so, put off by the, dead look in his
And then those eyes notice me, and without even the slightest hint of recognition, he begins to make his way to my table, slowly verb Present ends in ING a strange, thick, deep red in his hand.

He says nothing as he approaches and sits down across from me. He barely even his his greeting, so I take the cue. "Hi," I say.
He grunts a that resembles a hi back, so I take it. "Did you have any trouble finding the Kyle shakes his head and half shrugs at the same time, and noncommittal.
I catch the waiter's eye and point to my drink. I'm already more than a little, but something tells me it's not going to be enough to get me through the evening.
Kyle takes a long sip of his strange crimson drink and I use the moment to take in his makeup. He's really committed to his, apparently, because his is professional grade and incredibly I wonder if his job gives him access to a movie set or something like that, but recall his profile saying he worked in the field.
"So, what do you do again?" I ask nervously.
Kyle looks at me, though his exceptionally makeup, and it's verb Present ends in ING me out. "Work in the medical field," he murmurs cautiously, doing nothing to quell my nerves.
The sad thing is, beneath the makeup, he's extremely His profile picture, I shamefully admit, is part of what made me agree to this But now, whether it's the or his weird Noun, I can't help but wonder how long ago that photo was actually taken. Like before he died and came back as a Noun ? I push away the Adjective thought.

"Doing what?" I breathe, my trembling voice doing nothing to my nerves.
"Coroner's office."
My heart speeds up exponentially. What does he do in the coroner's office? the freaking brains of corpse's?
I don't dare ask. Instead my Noun Plural follow the lines of his skin, the patches of missing flesh. It's just so utterly
"So you're really into Halloween," I muse.
He just I'd suggested alternative nights to get drinks, but he was always busy, always Adjective , except for this one night.
"Halloween?" I'd asked, skeptical. "Is it?" he'd replied, as if he'd neither realized nor cared. But then why does he look like he spent Noun Plural in hair and makeup Verb Present ends in ING the effect of a brain-munching Noun Plural?
I wait for him to ask about me, but I get nothing, and when I try to make conversation, Kyle seems more communicating in one-word answers and grunts. He verb Present ends in S down the last of his drink, and when I ask if he wants to order another, he hastily stops me from waving over the waiter, says he'll be right back, and disappears around the corner of the bar.
I'm for almost ten minutes, and I nearly get up and leave, when Kyle suddenly emerges from the back hallway that leads to the restrooms, with another, dark red drink in his pale, made up hands. He sits back down, but makes no effort to explain where he'd been, where he'd gotten his drink,

of to make conversation at an, for that matter.
Maybe I've had one zombietini too many, but I'm starting to wonder if this guy actually is a zombie.
My eyes fall to his tattered, sulliedt-shirt. Had it had that much fake blood on it before he'd left and returned?
My races even faster and nausea rises in my gut. I know it's a ridiculous notionutterly preposterous. Butat the same time, I'm starting to wish I'd spent less time reading and more time watching The Walking Dead with Cora.
I shake my head, ridding it of these thoughts.
"Dance?" Kyle grunts at me.
I shrug. Dancing with him can't be much worse than sitting here trying to force through his grunts
We dance, slowly for about two songs, but he's too I'm about to make an excuse to cut the date short when I feel his breath on my, like he's positioning to take a bite.
I panic.
Whether it's too many zombietinis, or his makeup, his personality (or lack thereof) I'm not taking any Noun Plural . Nope, screw that, my brains are staying promptly where they are inside my
"I'm sorry," I say, backing away from Kyle. "I'm not feeling well."
I out of the bar thinking myself pathetic. Cora will have something to say about this. She'll go on and on about how I find something with every guy I meet.

first date in months, and, of all things, I manage to convince myself he's a freaking?
Maybe I'm starting to lose it.
Still, when I'm safe in my apartment, I delete the With Brains app from my phone. Because if there are zombies on this earth, that is the they're using to findand victims.
It isn't until I'm verb Present ends in ING my black shirt over my head that I realize there's a Adjective spot on the front of it, where it came into contact with Kyle's shirt as we I touch my Noun Plural to it, my heart stopping when they come away a deep, still wetstill warm.
