Who is Alabama quarterback Tua Tagovailoa?

Sometimes, it pays to wait and watch, _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ your _____Noun Plural_____ until you can show the world just what you can do.

For Tua Tagovailoa, his chance came on college football's _____Adjective Ends in EST_____ stage, when Alabama Coach Nick Saban decided at halftime to replace quarterback Jalen Hurts with his freshman from Hawaii, a guy who had been offered a _____Noun_____ only after Jake Fromm _____Verb Past Tense_____ his _____Repeat Last Noun_____ at Georgia.

It was a wild ride from there, with Tagovailoa completing one of the best game-winning passes in a college-football game since Doug Flutie as the Crimson Tide won in overtime. But the glory of that _____Number_____ yard touchdown pass came after a _____Adjective_____ moment in which he took a sack. "Tua probably couldn't have thrown that pass if I could have _____Verb Past Tense_____ him after the sack," Saban said afterward, "but I couldn't get out there fast enough."

The legend of Tagovailoa was years in the making, of course, and has roots in Polynesia, with a nod to Marcus Mariota, the _____Noun_____ winner three years ago. "To the Polynesian community, I hope and pray that this is only the beginning," Mariota said as he accepted the _____Repeat Last Noun_____ that night. "Young _____Adjective_____ athletes everywhere, you should take this as motivation, and dream big and strive for _____Noun Plural_____."
