Soapy Smith's Game

The smile on Smith's broadened as he listened to the other man He almost broke into laughter as Bowers paid for the drinks by Verb Present ends in ING a dozen coins on the counterthen palmed three of them back into his Part of Body.
Several drinkers moved up to the pair, thanking Bowers for the round.
A couple wore the brands of newcomers to the north, spanking-new mackinaws and trousers, boots and still Even without looking at Bowers, Smith knew what the old capper would be thinking. He nudged "the reverend's" and shook his head when Bowers looked his way.
But Bowers wouldn't be so easily denied he spoke Adjective enough that the football team pet name eg messers arsnal fappers earlobe lickers could hear. "Colonel Smith, the last time yo and I attended a stockholder's meeting you showed the group an amazing trick. You placed a beneath one of the three walnut writeshells without spaces, then shuffled the three around. Somehow the Repeat Last Noun never seemed to Verb Base Form beneath the same Do you remember that bit of fun?"
"Indeed I do," said Jeff Smith, surprised at the pleasant jab of anticipation, the challenge that he felt. But I'm not going to do it, he told himself. No action, nothing like this until I make my decision. Then maybe "I remember most, Reverend Bowers, But unfortunately, I have neither a Repeat Last Noun nor the write s hells without spaces" His deep voice, with its undertone, captured an audience with his words. This, of course, was nothing new. His voice, his way of verb Present ends in ING a man or a crowd, these were the makings of Jefferson Smith.

"How fortunate, then," said Bowers, "that I have a set of and a and a Repeat Last Noun right here." He Verb Past Tense them from his coat and laid them on a table. "But II've never been able to the trick. Would you demonstrate it?" More spectators, intrigued by the four innocent appearing objects on the table, verb Past Tense closer.
Jeff Smith strove to give Bowers a look of It didn't work. He could only return the other man's grin. Within him his began to faster. The ends of his plural part of body telegraphed a Adjective Adjective excitement to his brain. It'd been weeks since they'd set up a crowd for a write s h e 11 without spaces game. He felt his hands literally Verb Base Form to get into the action.

"It's a trick, Reverend," said Smith. "I place the beneath onewriteshellwithoutspaces, like this. Then Iverb Base Form all threewriteshellswithoutspaces from place to place on the table top, like this. And in a moment's time I've made you lose track of which write s hell without spaces contains the Repeat Last Noun Now, for instance, I'm sure you don't know where the lies."
"I'm sure I do," Bowers. "So sure that if I lose I'll buy more Noun Plural for the boys here. Provided, of course, that you'll Verb Base Form if I win."
"Done!" said Jeff smith, Verb Present ends in ING "But remember, this is a trick. I warn you, I'm not playing fair."
"Stop verb Present ends in ING, Colonel," Bowers replied in a way. "I say the Noun is under the center write shell without spaces there. Now lift it and see if I'm not right."
First with a look of triumph, then of dismay, Smith lifted the center write s h e l l without spaces . The Repeat Last Noun Verb Past Tense there.
For only a moment he allowed the look ofabstract noun relating to a visible facial expression eg confusion happiness etc to linge Then with apparent good naturedness he verb Past Tense and told Clancy to pour drinks for everyone.

"This time, Mr. Bowers, we shall see. I'd wager my last dollars I can fool you yet."
From behind came the familiar drone of George Wilder's voice.
"If you're really so sure, Colonel whatever-your-name-is, I'll wager you for about of those last dollars." Again the thrill of the game, the chase, the verb Base Form, quickened Jeff Smith's Wilder crowded through the now packed throng of onlookers and tossed ten-dollar gold pieces on the table. Smith gave the newcomer a nod and peeled out fifty dollars in bills. Then he stuck the beneath a write s h e 11 without spaces Once again he shuffled the write shells without spaces across the table. Grinning, Wilder picked the left one. And to Smith's apparent chagrin, Wilder had guessed right.
There was one thing about that colonel, all the crowd agreed. He sure was a marvelous He quickly offered Wilder the opportunity to double his income and Wilder just as quickly Smith lost an additional hundred dollars to the Adjective newcomer.

Laughing, Wilder picked up his money and deposited it in a moosehide poke. He waved it to the crowd as he stepped back. "Why hike to the Proper Noun, men? There's more gold to be picked from this man's pockets than was ever found in a creek!" Another man stepped forward and asked to play. A,, Verb Present ends in ING young man. Jeff Smith feared for an instant that Syd Dixon might have one of his spells, might on the floor before him. But he gathered an extra reserve of strength from somewhere. He placed dollars on the table.
This time, for the first time, Smith won. But Dixon doubled on the next three plays and walked off with a poke of Jeff Smith's money.
Now or men clamored to get into the action. With his own cappers out of the game Jefferson Smith studied each one but Which would have the most to lose? Which would stay in the game the longer? Which might spoil the mood of the crowd when he lost?
"I'm warning you," he said to a heavy set miner. "It's like I told the other men. This isn't a game, it's a You can't verb Base Form me." The whole crowd with laughter. Bowers and Wilder and Dixon were particularly "No sir," Wilder exclaimed, holding up his bulging poke, "no indeed, he can't Part of Body

As the crowd knew he would, the miner won the first two contests easily. He'd have lost the third time, but the friendly preacher, Bowers, talked him into choosing the left, not the center write s hell without spaces He won still again.
Then he lost twice in a row. Cautious now, he made only a bet the next two times, and won. Then after Smith had already started to move the write s hells without spaces on another turn he threw caution to the windsand with it half his life savings. He asked, was it too late to raise the existing small bet to a one?
The accommodating Smith considered the question for a moment.
Nono, he guessed not. The betting raised to hundred.
"Now," he answered the man, "which one, sir? Which hides the Noun ?"
With a wink at Reverend Bowers, who nodded in good-humored agreement, the miner chose the center write s hell without spaces When Smith raised it, there was nothing.

The

miner looked at Smith For an instant Smith feared the man would verb Base Form Then he turned and verb Past Tense through the crowd and out the door, Part of Body down.
"I knew it wasn't under that write s hell without spaces," a Adjective voice pierced through the onlookers, dispelling any slight mood of the others may have had for the miner. "I'll bet you it's under theAdjectivewrite s hell without spaces" Obligingly Jeff Smith raised the Repeat Last Adjective writes hell without spaces and sure enough there lay the elusive green
"Right you are, sir," said Smith, "And I'm mighty glad it wasn't' you I bet against."
"You'd better be glad," said Red Gibbs, now a trifle "I've picked every one of 'em right tonight. Every single one. If I had a cent to bet against you, you'd be" Another voice asked, "You really guessed every one right?"
"No guessing about it. I just got eyes which'readjective ending in ER than his Part of Body ."

"I'll stake you, and give you a tenth of the take, mister," said the second voice. "Okay with you, Colonel?" Smith nodded Adverb "As long as there's no Adjective feelings when you Verb Base Form And of course under Red Gibbs' guiding hand the poor loser lost.
After two small wins the man bet heavily, more than $700, and for the "first time" that evening Red Gibbs He was sorry.
The third loser, a,,,, time doing it. Once, Smith feared the man would, and while he led the game at that. But with careful coaxing he stayed in. He'dverb_Base Form a little,verb_Base Form a
