Halloween Story

Twass the _____ before Halloween and all _____ the gloom the _____ was decorated in cobwebs from room to room. The kids were all dressed up with bags for their treats, and I was anticipating a _____ back and _____ feet. The sun had just set and the night was ablaze with children all hyped up in a _____ induced haze. We opened the _____ and oh what a sight, _____ and witches filled up the night. Porch lights were on and the treats were aplenty, down the street came a group of costumed tricksters, I counted about twenty. With _____ and cheers along with parently caution, we started the journey that, for me, would end in exhaustion. Down the street we then _____ from house to house. We saw Kermit, and yoda, and a pink minni mouse. My children were monsters, 90% of the year, but tonight they each looked the part, inspiring fear. One was a vampire, the other a witch, we walked around town with a _____ who called herself lelo and her _____ alien stitch. On and on we did _____, for what seemed like forever, but my kids weren't ready to go _____ so they had to get clever. They _____ and begged for one last small _____, the promised that later they'd each rub my _____. It was a deal, I sighed in defeat, so we turned and went down, a _____, _____ old street. We came to a _____ that was _____ and old, and in the front of this house was a _____ all gold. Inside the pumpkin were candies galore. When the kids reached inside they suddenly heard the creek of a _____. A elderly woman dressed all in black came _____ out and with a night colored _____. She cackled and grinned through her _____ old face. A fitting sight for this _____ old place.

The

kids both looked up and stared with alarm even though I explained that she would do them no harm. They backed away _____, _____ their candy bags tight, and in less than a _____ they were both out of sight.
