Legends

_____girl name one_____ lived in a small house on the edge of town with her father, her stepmother and her stepsister. _____girl name one_____ stepmother disliked _____girl name one_____, favoring her true daughter, _____girl name two_____. Soon after her father's remarriage, _____girl name one_____ found that all the housework fell to her while _____girl name two_____ idled her days away. _____girl name one_____ father was a timid man, and could not bring himself to defy his wife. So _____girl name one_____ wore _____girl name two_____ cast off clothes, and her hands grew red and chapped from scrubbing in the cold, while _____girl name two_____ attended parties, growing _____bad trait_____ and _____bad trait_____.

One year, when the winter snows were particularly fierce, _____girl name one_____ family ran out of money. _____girl name one_____ stepmother began nagging her father to send _____girl name one_____ away, because they could not afford to keep two girls. Reluctantly, _____girl name one_____ father agreed. He took _____girl name one_____ to a cottage deep in the woods and left her there.

_____girl name one_____ was very frightened. The woods were said to be filled with _____scary thing_____ and _____scary thing_____. But _____girl name one_____ was also practical. She entered the cottage with her small bundle and found a fireplace, a lopsided table and a rusty old pot. _____girl name two_____ put away the loaf of _____food_____, the knife and the slab of _____food_____ her father had given her. She folded the blanket and laid it near the fireplace. Then she collected wood and built a fire.

_____girl name one_____ knew the _____food_____ and _____food_____ would not last her all winter. So she made a snare using the thin, flexible branches of the trees and caught a snow rabbit to eat. She also dug under the deep snow, and found some roots and _____food_____ for food.

By dark, _____girl name one_____ had melted water for drinking, and used the rest to make a _____food_____. So _____girl name one_____ ate well. Then she lay down near the fire for the night, listening to the wind howl and pretending to herself that she was not frightened of the woods.

It was midnight when the knock came

Knock, knock, knock.

It echoed hollowly through the dark cottage. _____girl name one_____ woke with a start, her heart pounding in fear. It came again.

Knock, knock, knock.

_____girl name one_____ thought of the _____scary thing_____. She hid under her blanket, praying the thing would go away.

Knock, knock, knock.

Oksana rose, grabbing a branch. She crept towards the door. The wind howled eerily down the chimney. _____girl name one_____ swallowed and swung the door open. There was nothing there. Her heart pounded fiercely as she stared out at the snow whipping about in the light of her small fire. Then she looked down. _____girl name one_____ let out a shriek of terror and leapt back, dropping her stick. It was a _____head body part_____. An evil _____scary thing_____.

It had no body!

"Who are you?" _____girl name one_____ stuttered, clutching the door with shaking hands.

"I am _____animal one_____ Head," it replied.

Indeed, _____girl name one_____ saw at once that it was. The head was _____color_____, with curved _____head body part_____ and strange, haunted _____head body part_____.

"I am cold and hungry. May I sleep by your fire?" the _____animal one_____ Head asked. Its voice was cold and lifeless.

_____girl name one_____ gulped down her horror.

"Of course," she said.

"Lift me over the threshold," demanded the _____animal one_____ Head hollowly. _____girl name one_____ did as she was bidden.

"Place me near the fire."

Anger warred with compassion inside her, but compassion won. _____girl name one_____ put it next to the fire.

"I am hungry," said the _____animal one_____ Head. "Feed me."

_____girl name one_____ thought of her meager food supply. The _____food_____ left in the pot was for her breakfast. She fed it to _____animal one_____ Head.

"I will sleep now," it said. There was no softening in its attitude toward her. Nonetheless, _____girl name one_____ made it comfortable for the night, giving it her blanket and sleeping in a cold corner with only her cloak to keep her warm.

When she woke in the morning, _____animal one_____ Head was gone. Where it had slept was a large trunk, filled with the most beautiful _____clothing_____ she had ever seen. Under the gowns lay heaps of gold and jewels. _____girl name one_____ stared blankly at the riches in front of her. Her father's voice roused her.

"Daughter, I am come."

_____girl name one_____ forgot the trunk in her joy. She ran into his arms. He had defied her stepmother to come and bring her back to their home.

"Papa, come see!" _____girl name one_____ exclaimed as she pulled him into the cottage. Her words tumbled over each other as she explained.

Her father took her home. She was honored in her town for her compassion and her bravery, and won scores of suitors. She married soon after her return from the cottage.

Hearing _____girl name one_____ story, and seeing the riches she had received, _____girl name two_____ went to the cottage in the forest and spent the night there. But when _____animal one_____ Head appeared, she was too lazy to serve it. In the morning, all her gowns had turned to _____embarrassing clothing_____ and her possessions to _____boring noun_____.

But _____girl name one_____ lived to a ripe old age in happiness and prosperity.
