Donuts to Dollars

There once was a salesman from down South, who knew the pathway to prospects' money was through their mouth.

When he first Verb Past Tense with a hospital he arrived with munchkins. Who can say no to a ________? As they Verb Past Tense the munchkin, so did they welcome the ________.

Conversations began, and as they Verb Past Tense, the donuts grew to be Adjective. Sometimes, just to stay Adjective in their minds, this Adjective salesman would show up for no other reason than to deliver Noun Plural.

As time passed, and their Noun Plural got closer to a Adjective deal, the donuts graduated to fancy , Adjective donuts, psychologically Verb Present ends in ING the relationship between Noun and Noun along with it.

Eventually an Noun was reached, contracts were Verb Past Tense, and implementation planning began. While Noun would be the expected accompaniment to the company's Noun, our Southern salesman knew there was only one thing to bring to this celebration: Noun Plural!
