to enter or to not enter

I walk past this weird _____Noun_____ every day on my way home to school. It's old and looks dead; only a family could give a house a soul. _____Adjective_____ roof _____Proper Noun Plural_____, an unhinged door that looks like it would fall any second, windows filled with a thick layer of dust, and much more. growing up, I have always been told that in their lives a witch. I have never really believed those rumors and as I stand there, glaring at the house, I still remain skeptical. I always wanted to know what was in there. I want to prove that I'm brave enough to walk into a _____Noun_____ that no one has dared to enter before. as I walk up to the porch, the creaking wood makes me fear that it would give away any second. the door handle is rusty and smells of blood even from a foot away. as I turn the doorknob, the door creaks; a terrifying scream compared to the silence of the outdoors. walking in, I smell a pungent, grotesque sent. it smells of _____Noun_____ fluids, of death, and rotting bodies. as I turn to the side, I make sure that the door remains open, just in case. I can see the kitchen about ten feet away. I walk into the _____Noun_____ I see a fridge door left open and a figure. immediately it disappears and disintegrates into thin air and sprint to the front door. a _____Noun_____ grabs me by the shoulders and yanks me onto the stairs. im dragged up and as I turn, I see a cloaked figure. as it gives a howling scream. I see a hollow face. starved of food, massive craters in the cheeks and eyes. its breath is cold against my skin and the grasp is boney and hard. as I try to break free, it gives another howling scream. "Don't run away and I'll raise you. Give you all that you want and need." it says in a hollow, low, and death-filled voice. Then I realize; it's Death himself . after all the fables and myths I have heard of him, I see it. the staff, the black cloak, the hollow face...
