Ouija board knocks back

In high school my friends and I were messing around with a Ouija board one night. We had done it before and nothing _____Adjective_____ had ever happened. We usually did it to try and _____verb present tense modifying a noun_____ each other or are _____Noun Plural_____. We all thought it was a _____Noun_____. That night there was no one else home except the 7 of us and we were all together around the _____Noun_____. One of the girls there wanted to try it. She had never done it before.

This time was different. The board misspelled some of the words the same way every time. It gave answers that seemed really historically accurate for our town (things we neither knew or cared about). Long story short, the "_____Noun_____" claimed it was a 10 year old _____Noun_____ who had died on the property in the _____time period_____ and was buried there too in an unmarked _____Noun_____ (my friends house was on a _____Noun_____ in the edge of town). We were all a little freaked out because the board had never been so _____Adjective_____ and _____Adjective_____. However, we were still _____Adjective_____ and we were all assuming one of us was trying to scare the rest.

Finally, my friend asked if the _____Adjective_____ could do something to prove he was there with us. It went to Yes and then spelled out _____spell out a word_____. Then the _____Noun_____ stopped _____Verb Present ends in ING_____. We just all stared at it _____Adverb_____ and then there was a _____onomatopoeia_____ on the window right next to us. The lights were on outside and there was absolutely no _____Noun_____ out there.

We never _____verb past tense modifying a noun_____ that _____Adjective_____ board again.
