Lycanthropy

One night, the townsfolk heard a shrill scream. Edward and his family woke up and walked out of their home to find a _____Adjective_____ body, laying dead on the grass. The body is mangled beyond recognition with bite marks found on the body. The residents first thought was that a bear attacked them. But the bite marks and the footprints didn't match that of a bear. The bite marks and the footprints seemed to match those of a wolf but were larger than usual. Edward concluded: a werewolf did it. The townsfolk laughed and mocked Edward for coming to that conclusion. After all, werewolves don't exist, right? But Edward argued. There are rumors of werewolf attacks all over America. But the residents think his insane. They believe the stories were spread by sensationalist media looking for a dramatic headline. Edward gave up and went back home with his family. David tries to support his son, but he doesn't know how. Laura fully believes that a werewolf did attack the town. Frank doesn't believe Edward, joking that he's gone insane. And Natalia is somewhere in the middle. The next morning, Edward reads up on all things about werewolves, collecting and stealing books. David tries to talk Edward out of this but Edward refuses.
