States 3

Sacramento, California
In the first decade of the 19th century, Spanish explorer First Name named the Rio de los Spanish Word, or Sacramento River, after the Spanish word for "religious Noun." The settlement bordered by the Sacramento River later became known as Sacramento as well, and it was designated the state capital in 1854. Today, it's one of the capital cities Noun Plural always get wrong.

Denver, Colorado

In 1858 a group of Nour Plural crossed the plains of eastern Colorado and found Noun at the base of what are now the Rocky Mountains. The gold rush that followed was relatively Adjective, but a city founded by Kansas man First Name H. Last Name quickly sprung up. Person named the town after the most recent governor of the Kansas Territory, First Name Denver, hoping to curry favor (he didn't know Denver had already Verb Past Tense!). Colorado became a territory in 1861 and a state in 1876; Denver was designated the capital in 1881. You probably already know Denver's quirky nickname, the "Adjective City," so called because of its elevation, but do you know the most Adjective small town in Colorado?
