Life in a Logging Camp

In the early 1900s, northern logging camps were like small communities located deep in woods. Cutting _____Noun_____ was dangerous work, and for a _____Noun_____, days were long and hard. Turning an _____Adjective_____ tree into neat _____Noun Plural_____ of wood was no simple task. Each lumberjack had his own special job to do, but they all worked as a team.

On an average day a lumberjack awoke before the crack of dawn. Leaving the warm, cozy _____Noun_____ could be unpleasant, especially on a freezing, snowy day. But the thought of a tasty pancake breakfast served by the camp probably helped! Lumberjacks would then trudge off into a vast landscape of trees. Some days, a _____Noun_____ even needed to wear _____Noun Plural_____ to avoid falling waist-deep into thick snow.
