DEAR ABBY 3

DEAR ABBY: My husband _____ verb past tense modifying a noun away two years ago. I hope you can give me some advice on how to deal with my _____ whatever year old daughter who never left _____ Noun. We generally get along well. She does freelance _____ Noun, but doesn't earn much. She contributes only $ _____ number a _____ time period like month. Also, she has a _____ Noun phobia, so she doesn't _____ Verb Base Form. She expects me to drive her to various _____ Noun Plural.

She only has _____ Adjective friends. She wants to travel, but doesn't want to go alone and keeps pushing me to go with her, although I don't really want to. I have suggested group _____ Noun Plural, but she hesitates to go by herself. I feel pressured to keep _____ Noun and go along with her desires. How should I handle this? --

PULLING BACK IN NEVADA

DEAR PULLING BACK: You have protected and _____ verb past tensed modifying a noun your daughter far too long. Tell her that her dependence on _____ Noun has become too much. She must overcome her _____ Noun phobia (or at least take advantage of public _____ Noun) and her fear of _____ Verb Present ends in ING without you. Unless you have provided for her financially in the event of your death, how do you think she will survive living as a _____ Adjective _____ nickname with no employment and life skills?

There are _____ job title plural who specialize in ridding people of _____ Noun Plural. While she's there, your daughter should also get help to gain a degree of concept, even if it's about 30 years late.

DEAR ABBY: Recently, my three adult Noun Plural chipped in to send their aunt Noun for her birthday. She's number and doesn't need anything; she doesn't even go out. Financially, she's in Adjective shape. They placed the order, and it came to $number. Well, Abby, my Adjective mom went crazy! She thought that was too little to spend on their Noun.

I think my kids were very Adjective. They are all trying to build their Noun Plural. One has two kids, a Noun and a mortgage. The other just got engaged and is saving for the event. The third is saving for her Noun. My mother thinks her grandchildren should give her Noun Plural and money. I think she should expect Noun from her own Noun Plural, not the Noun Plural. I hung up on her when she attacked my Noun Plural. She always thinks she's Adjective. Your thoughts? -- LIVING WITH A DIFFICULT MOM

DEAR LIVING: Was Auntie satisfied with the meal? Your mother may think she is always right, but she was wrong to criticize the amount your children spent on Noun for their Noun. That she would then announce she expects Noun Plural and money from them is beyond Adjective. The decision about what to give is up to the title, not the recipient.

DEAR

ABBY: My sister passed away from _____ body part _____ disease 10 months ago. My brother-in-law no longer wants to live in the house they shared because of too many _____ Noun Plural, so he's giving the house to his daughter and moving into an _____ location. My other sister wants to throw him a housewarming party. Is that appropriate? -- WELL-MEANING IN THE EAST

DEAR WELL-MEANING: Of course it is, as long as it's OK with your _____ Noun. It's not only appropriate, it is a _____ Adjective, _____ Adjective gesture and, in a sense, a celebration of _____ concept. Good for _____ Person !
