Something in the closet

My mom and I had a routine for _____habit_____. I brushed my teeth, she brushed my _____Noun_____, she sang lullabies and I read us new stories.

Despite this, the routine was always _____Adjective_____. She would check through my closet and move my clothes around, showing me the colored _____Noun_____ I would use as a _____Noun_____. She always did her best to show me that there was no monster in the closet, or under my _____Noun_____, however I was never _____Verb Past Tense_____.

He told me not to _____Verb Base Form_____ her. His eyes kept me awake at night, leaving me _____feeling_____ for school the next morning. He would drop my clothes on the floor that he wanted me to wear, he said I looked _____Adjective Ends in EST_____ in my pink _____Noun_____.

The more my mom tried to tell me he didn't exist, the more _____feeling_____ he became, and he would get _____feeling_____ with me. I never liked when he was _____feeling_____ with me, he was never the nicest, but he was my only friend.

My next bedtime routine with mom carried on like normal, but I told her she didn't need to _____Verb Base Form_____ for monsters anymore, because he wasn't a monster. She smiled and told me how proud she was of me for " overcoming my fear". I never told her I was _____feeling_____, I just didn't want to get in trouble for having a _____First Name of a Person_____ over when she didn't know.
