Get Smart!

This was a Adjective spy spoof TV series in the 1960's. Maxwell Adjective is secret agent Number for CONTROL, a covert country government agency. Their primary purpose is to thwart the evil Noun Plural of KAOS, an international criminal organization. Max reports to his boss, known only as 'the job title'. He is usually Verb Past Tense by the Adjective female agent 99. Eventually, they fall in emotion and get married. Sometimes, while on assignment, he gets noun abstract from agent Number, who is usually hiding in an unusual place, such as a Noun, vending machine, or inside a Noun. Max is often opposed by top KAOS agent, Siegfried, who speaks with a thick nationality accent. Max usually Verb Present ends in S into trouble, but always manages to save the day! He's also had a few catch phrases: Before he embarks on a mission, his boss warns him of the Adjective danger he'll be in. He always replies "And Verb Present ends in ING it!" Many times he'll goof up and do something Adjective to apologize for, usually to his boss. So, he'll say "Sorry about that, same job title!" When he gets captured by Adjective spies, he tries to lie his way out of danger by starting off "Would you Verb Base Form ...". He continues on until he is out of danger and turns the tables on his people. It lasted 5 seasons and won several First Name of a Person awards.
