

gdg

1. Adjective
2. Verb Past Tense

Once upon a time, there were two children, Allen and Nicole, who loved to help people see better. They dreamed of making a difference in the world and becoming eye doctors. They went to the Inter American School of Optometry, where they met on the rooftop of their school while admiring the stunning view of the city skyline. Allen, from California, shared some of his favorite chocolate with Nicole, and they became inseparable friends.

_____Adjective_____, they explored the city, tried new foods, and learned about different cultures. They worked tirelessly to help people see better and received countless thank-you notes and grateful smiles from their patients. They moved to many _____Verb Past Tense_____ cities, including Philadelphia and San Juan, and saw firsthand how important good eye health was and how much it could improve people's lives.

One day, Allen and Nicole fell in love and decided to get married. They wanted their wedding to be a celebration of their love and their diverse backgrounds. So, they had a fusion wedding, blending Middle Eastern and Puerto Rican traditions. It was a joyous occasion filled with music, laughter, and delicious food.

A few years after they got married, Nicole discovered that she was pregnant. She and Allen were overjoyed at the news and eagerly prepared for the arrival of their little one. They had a baby shower with friends and family to celebrate.

As the due date approached, Nicole became more and more excited and nervous. She had heard so many stories about the pains of childbirth and wondered how she would handle it. Allen was her rock, always by her side, holding her hand, and reassuring her that everything would be okay.

Finally, the day arrived, and Nicole went into labor. She was admitted to the hospital, and Allen was right there beside her, holding her hand and cheering her on. After several hours of intense labor, their beautiful baby was born, and they named him Ryan.

The first few weeks were a blur of sleepless nights, diaper changes, and feedings. Allen and Nicole were exhausted but deliriously happy. They marveled at how tiny and perfect Ryan was and how much they loved him. As Ryan grew, Allen and Nicole adjusted to their new roles as parents. They took turns getting up in the middle of the night to soothe him, sang lullabies to him, and watched in amazement as he learned to crawl and then walk.

Through it all, their love for each other and for Ryan only grew stronger. They knew that they were a family now, and they were grateful for every moment they spent together. Allen and Nicole continued to help people see better, and Ryan grew up knowing that his parents were making a difference in the world. He was proud of them and knew that he wanted to follow in their footsteps one day. And so, the family of three lived happily ever after, helping people see better and spreading love wherever they went.