Grandpa in a bucket

Harriett, Rick, and Kris moved out to _____Location_____ to live on a Navajo reservation near Four Corners where Rick became a teacher. This new Williams family was hardly welcome in Teec Nos Pos, and there were many cultural differences to overcome. Rick was called bilagáana or "_____Food_____ man" because he was _____Adjective_____ on the outside from the hot desert sun, but _____Adjective_____ on the inside. Kris was in kindergarten, but was already farther ahead academically than most other kids. Harriett was a teaching aide in the classroom, and the opinions of women were not very respected in Navajo society.

Things got much worse one day when several Navajo children were _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ about "Cheii! Cheii!" while running away from Kris. She had captured a _____Animal_____, which the Navajo refer to as " Grandfather." According to Navajo legend, _____Repeat Last Animal_____ was able to defeat Lightning, and they call upon his spirit to _____Verb Base Form_____ them from evil. To imprison the spirit of Grandfather in a bucket, even if tricked by other children to do so, was a great offense. Parents and other elders within the Navajo community were _____Verb Past Tense_____ that Rick did not _____Verb Base Form_____ Kris for doing something so _____Adjective_____. Rick and Harriett knew that moving back to Ohio was going to be the _____Adjective Ends in EST_____ thing for their family.
