Camp Adventures part 2

One _____Adjective_____ characteristic of our family is the generations we represent - A Gen-X, an Xennial, and a Millennial born to Baby Boom parents. Each generation is supposed to care for and _____Verb Base Form_____ the next, and the younger members of the family have more examples to learn from than their predecessors. Of course, this also assumes the older members of the family don't _____Verb Base Form_____ the developing youth for their own amusement.

We took a truly generational trip to Mohican to go camping. We went _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ to Big Lyons Falls and the covered bridge, but most of our vacation was spent _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ by the river in camp chairs shooting _____Noun Plural_____ at beer cans with a slingshot. A cease fire was called whenever canoers _____Verb Past Tense_____ near the shore to get to the pickup location right next to our campsite. When it rained however, the high water rushed by, _____Verb Present ends in ING_____ up a foamy cloud of fertilizer runoff along the banks. With no canoers to watch, we convinced Wes the _____Adjective_____ brown foam was "River Cake" - a naturally occurring delicious dessert enjoyed by the residents of rural north-central _____Location_____. He didn't believe us until we descended the bank with a paper plate, scooped up a birthday-sized slice of river cake, and pretended to _____Verb Base Form_____ it. Thankfully, we let him in on the joke before he took a bite, but only just before. Our intervention was similarly well-timed when Wes aimed the slingshot at a protected blue _____Animal_____ standing in the river.
