Each Williams kid lived at home for a few years after school. Student loans, landing a real job, and saving up _____ Noun were all legitimate reasons for _____ Verb Present ends in ING. Each of us eventually felt the pull of independence, whether towards a _____ Noun, a relationship, or the prospect of having a reasonably portioned snack.

Wes's time _____ Adverb before and after barber school was punctuated by a personal modern art project called "food fractions." In an effort to eat healthier through smaller _____ Noun Plural, Rick and Harriett would leave a portion of a dessert or snack to sit in the packaging. These morsels laid in wait, sometimes for days, in the oak drawers and cabinets, on top of the toaster, or sometimes _____ Verb Present ends in ING on the cutting board. How would you prepare a half slice of bread torn by _____ Part of Body? Would you like some _____ Food? Just enough broken bits to _____ Verb Base Form in the can. Chex Mix? Half a mouthful in the corner of the bag. _____ Food? Coffee cake? Full-size plastic tray, but only a nibble remained of each. Would you like half a cinnamon _____ Food? Only if you cut a full _____ Repeat Last Food instead of using the half that was already cut. Wes continued his documentary if only to prove these food fractions _____ Verb Past Tense and they were not unique. He finally uploaded the collection to Facebook: Food Fractions - a psychological study into two parents who lovingly coped with three kids emptying their nest one-third at a time over twenty years.
