

End of the World

1. Adjective
2. Adjective

End of the World

In the end, it was always going to be [FPD: and AUSA. Years of ADJECTIVE tension in the courtroom, countless hours sending blistering NOUNS to each other, and ADJECTIVE moments locking eyes from their respective counsel's tables built up to this: two people in tattered suits, looking around at a courthouse turned to rubble.

_____ Adjective having woken up to a profoundly changed world, with darkened _____ Adjective filled with NOUNS and nary another human to be found, FPD and AUSA dutifully made their way across the flattened city to where the courthouse once stood. If there was a chance that JUDGE was still alive, they knew they had no choice but to show up for their 10:00 a.m. revocation hearing.

"Well, this is unfortunate," FPD said. He/she looked around helplessly, taking in the ruins of Milwaukee, the hazy sun, and the eerie quiet.

AUSA gave FPD a(n) ADJECTIVE look. "I don't know," AUSA said. "This could be an opportunity. What are your thoughts on repopulation?" AUSA gave FPD a(n) ADJECTIVE wink.

FPD sighed. "I've never felt so EMOTION."