The End of the World

In the end, it was always going to be _____ and AUSA.

Years of _____ Adjective tension in the courtroom, countless hours sending blistering NOUNS to each other, and _____ Adjective moments locking eyes from their respective counsel's tables built up to this: two people in tattered suits, looking around at a courthouse turned to rubble.

Despite having woken up to a profoundly changed world, with darkened skies filled with _____ Noun Plural and nary another human to be found, FPD and AUSA dutifully made their way across the flattened city to where the courthouse once stood. If there was a chance that JUDGE was still alive, they knew they had no choice but to show up for their 10:00 a.m. revocation _____.

"Well, this is unfortunate," FPD said. He/she looked around helplessly, taking in the ruins of Milwaukee, the hazy sun, and the eerie quiet.

_____ FPD a(n) _____ Adjective look. "I don't know," AUSA said. "This could _____ an opportunity. What are your thoughts on repopulation?" AUSA gave FPD a(n) _____ Adjective wink.

FPD sighed. "I've never felt so _____ Noun

_____ Plural
