scary stall

Jack was a drifter hitchhicking his way to the West Coast.

A truck driver picked him up on the side of the road.

The road was dark and the fog made it so they couldn't see in front of them.

All at once an old woman crossed the road and they hit her causing her body to fly off into a nearby ditch.

They began to panic and blame each other and then finally they came to the conclusion that they were to bury her off in the woods.

"How are we gonna bury her?"; said the drifter.

The truck driver at once remembered that he was delivering Adjective Noun on this shipment so they opened up the back of the truck and found a Noun.

They carried the old woman in a Adjective Noun out into the woods and buried her.

The

drifter ended up doing most of the digging because the truck driver told him he owed it to him for the ride. Plus the truck driver was Adjective and Adjective so he tired easy when he did finally take a turn at digging.

As the drifter smoked a cigarette and wiped the sweat off his brow he heard a Noun.

“Did you hear that?”

“What?”

“Nothing, I thought I heard something over in the bushes.”

“Keep diggin’ so we can get outta hear sooner.”

They finished up, headed back to the truck and got in and left.

As they drove off they noticed the back of the truck had been closed without them having to do it.

"Funny," said the truck driver "I don't remember closin' it";

When they got to _____<sup>Location</sup>_____the truck driver and the drifter pulled over to a rest stop to take a piss.

The drifter finished taking a leak and went out to _____<sup>Verb</sup>_____a _____<sup>Noun</sup>_____while the truck driver stayed in the stall reading a magazine and taking a shit.

"Hey big boy,"; a _____<sup>Adjective</sup>_____voice pronounced.

"Who's that?"; said the truck driver
