What Happened to Our Teacher?

It was a cool and _____ December morning, and the students _____ walked into the building. It was just _____ days before Christmas break and the week was going by too _____.

As the students _____ the _____ they noticed the class was dark and Mrs. Waters-Jones was nowhere to be found; at least that's what they thought. _____ slowly opened the door and there she stood. Her usually _____ hair stood straight up on her head. Her glasses were crooked, and in her left hand, gasp, she held a red marking pen and in her right hand she held the district timed writings number 3. She was missing a shoe on her _____ foot. Alas, the students knew then that Mrs. Waters-Jones had gone far off the deep end. She wore _____ pants and a striped and _____ shirt. The students repeatedly called her name. Just then her daughter came from out of the closet in the _____ and told the students that it was no use, she couldn't _____ them. _____ asked Kenya what was wrong, and Kenya said that she was grading the papers, and no one had planned their essay. The only thing that would bring her back was thoughtful planning. At that very moment, the students _____ to their desks, whipped paper out of their notebook and began to write _____.

Slowly, the _____ opened up and Mrs. Waters-Jones began to _____ her eyes. As the students continued to write, the evil _____ spell was broken. Mrs. Waters-Jones continued to teach and several of her students got fives and sixes, and everyone lived _____ ever after.
