The Big Day

under way last summer, _____First name _____First name to a painful period: cramps, back pain, achy all over.

Miserable, she was ready to stay right where she was until her discomfort passed. But lying in bed, staring at the ceiling, wasn't helping. In fact, her back felt a little worse like that. Her side, maybe? No luck. She sighed. So much for vacation.

Jada, _____Age and her husband, Aquiol, of _____Noun _____Location, were staying in a confo in Los Angelos with two friends, Jailyn and Jaquan. Aquiol's parents were just down the hill in another cabin.

They'd planned a low-key long weekend for the _____Event of _____Event but on the morning of _____Event _____Event the thought of just watching fireworks made Jada cringe. She couldn't get _____Noun no matter what. She walked in circles around the condo, and up and down the steps that connected them

By _____Noun she was so exhausted that she begged off mini-golf. "Come on, you'll be fine,"; Jailyn, her best friend since childhood, urged. But Jadat knew she wasn't up to it.

"I'm going to try to nap,"; she said. "I'm sure I'll feel better by the time you all get back."; She managed to nap, fitfully, for an hour or so, but _____^{Noun}up panicked. Could the pain actually be worse? Five years before, a fibroid tumor had caused a similar sensation in her abdomen. Then there was the ruptured ovarian cyst she'd experienced in _____^{Year} which had also hurt like terrible cramps -- and had started with a backache. She couldn't bear the thought of dealing with either again.

So while she was relieved when Dan and her friends returned, what they saw took them aback. Pale and unhappy , West was _____^{Noun}involuntarily every few minutes. "This isn't like you,"; Dan said. "I think we should go to the hospital."; "No, no,"; she protested. "I'll be fine."; Whimper. If she didn't go, she thought to herself, then nothing could really be wrong.

But

_____ First name _____ could tell that something was wrong. His wife was not one to moan and groan. She'd stoically made it through ulcers, the fibroid tumor, the cyst. For her to be near tears was bad -- and the fact that they were so secluded was making him nervous. _____ First name _____; he said, "we're going."; And they went.
