Bender, David and Leone, Bruno. Paranormal Phenomena. sunuva: Greenhaven Press Inc.1991

Benders Noun offers honest advice on the matter of paranormal phenomena, ghosts, and Plural noun. In the process, Bender includes that most paranormal encounters can be Past tense verb and also that many people just jump to conclusions when ever they see or hear something out of the normal. But he also says that there are many things that cant be Past tense verb. I think this is a very Adjective source and it is very Adjective. It is kind of the same as all the other Plural noun because they all talk about the same thing. So the article is not one side because, it pretty much goes into both sides of the argument and really doesnt lean to one side or the other.

and Sprintons article offers advice on the nature of why we believe in paranormal phenomena. In the article includes the type of paranormal activity people to through and why we believe that it is Plural noun from out of this world. It also talks about the Noun activity associated with paranormal beliefs. This article is very one sided. It gives many reasons on why people believe in paranormal phenomena and it Present tense verb a lot of things on how that way of thinking could be Adjective. I believe
