My Crazy Aquatic Adventure

Hello! My name is Emily and I really have to study for my Water Cycle Noun. Everything was Adjective until a magical hole appeared in my room. It whisked me away to a wetland. I looked at myself and something was Adjective. I had turned into a water drop and I was sitting in groundwater. Plural noun later I started turning into water vapor Conjunction realized this could only be evaporation. I Past tense verb into a cloud and turned back into a liquid. This is called condensation. After that I precipitated and fell into an aquifer. To my right, I saw a Noun causing water pollution. He was dumping his soda into the lake. After that we would have to Verb water conservation so that wouldn't happen again. I noticed that I was floating away into a reservoir that must have been broken. I started Verb ending in ing into a tributary. It is a stream that flows to a larger body of water. The water splashed me onto a watershed. It looked Adjective because it was drained out. This must have been caused by a runoff. Enough with the vocabulary lesson, let's get back to my adventure. The Noun had splashed again, and I arrived back at the wetland. I saw the Adjective hole again and was relieved to see it had whisked me back to reality. I was now sitting at my desk where everything was normal. That was my hydrological cycle adventure.
