Penguin Mating Habits

Some penguins mate for life, others for just one season. They generally raise a small and the parents cooperate in caring for theand for the young. During the cold season on the other hand the mates separate formonths to protect the The male stays with the egg and keeps it warm, and the female goes out to sea and findsso that when it comes home, the baby will havetototo Once the female comes back, they switch. When mothers lose a chick, they sometimes attempt to 'steal' another mother's usually unsuccessfully as other females in the vicinity assist the defending mother inher chick. As the young grow, they assemble in large groups calledin some species, such asPenguins.
